CHÉRI & THE LAST OF CHÉRI

By Colette

- What did you discover about Colette's life by reading Judith Thurman's introduction? Why might Colette have opposed suffragettes while applauding women who were financially independent? How did the knowledge of Colette's later affair with her stepson affect your reading of Chéri?
- Discuss the novel's theme of physical beauty. Does a woman's power lie in her appearance? When it comes to aging and the laws of attraction, do equal standards exist between men and women?
- In the novel, power is also derived by showing no desire: both Léa and Chéri are careful not to reveal their feelings for each other. Do you think this is the way most couples experience a relationship? Would Léa and Chéri have stayed together if they had talked of love sooner, or did uncertainty keep their relationship alive?
- Do Madame Peloux and Madame Marie-Laure (Edmée's mother) have similar approaches to parenting? Are they good mothers?
- What did Patron, the boxer, try to teach Chéri about being a man? What does Chéri seem to believe about the differences between men and women? Why does his femininity vex Léa?
- To what extent does Léa act as a surrogate mother for Chéri? Is it good for wives and girlfriends to behave maternally toward their men?
- What are the other effects of the age difference between Chéri and Léa? How does age give Léa an advantage over Edmée?
- How does Desmond's club reflect France's cultural history during this time period? What was symbolic about the sale of Léa's home (to Americans, no less)?

- What does Chéri mean when, on page 263, he says that he is chaste while the rest of the world is mired in deception? Is he right?
- In terms of mood, tone, and storytelling, what shifts did you notice between Chéri and The Last of Chéri? How did your impressions of Chéri change between the opening scenes of Chéri and the closing scenes of The Last of Chéri?
- Does Léa’s life appeal to you? Who is her twenty-first-century equivalent?
- Would Léa have married Chéri, given the chance? Would their marriage have been happier than his marriage to Edmée? What is the difference between Léa’s financial power and Edmée’s?
- What pain is Chéri trying to relieve in the closing scene of The Last of Chéri? Do his actions mean that Léa “won”?
- What distinctions did you notice between Chéri and the film? What might Colette have said about the production? What made Michelle Pfeiffer ideal for the role of Léa?
- Which of Colette’s novels had you read previously? How does Chéri echo Colette’s other portrayals of men as lovers?
